They Still Don't All Go In The Black!

(How I improved my aim and added 70 points to my score) Part 1 of 2 by Greg Taillon

Although I've been firing pistols since I was a kid, my accuracy has not improved beyond what I call "Tin Can Marksmanship". Plinking at soda cans may require familiarity with the way your pistol aligns on target, but at the same time you have a pretty large target area when shooting at distances shorter than a normal pistol range (50ft). Whether you hit the can head on or only graze the top or bottom, it's still a hit when the can moves!

Even though I was awarded the Marksmanship ribbon in the Air Force when I qualified with a .38 revolver, I don't call getting 100 shots all on a paper silhouette of a man anything to write home about. Besides learning correct sight picture and to "squeeze your trigger", I didn't gain much else for that experience. It was not until I joined our Club's Pistol League that I realized that getting 10 shots in a 7/8" black circle from 50 feet, requires a lot more than "squeezing your trigger"! My first practice week was very humbling, my 173 score out of 300 total points meant my average round was in the 5 ring. My first thought was "these guys who are shooting in the 260, 270 or above range know something that I don't!" So I asked them! And putting what they told me into practice has improved my score from that humbling 173 to the 240-250 range. My best so far has been 252 and this occurred in only 10 weeks of shooting once a week, as my schedule provides little time for extra practices.

Bottom line here is that our club has not only a number of good shooters, but guys who are willing to share their experience and secrets. To receive some of this wisdom and experience, one only has to ask.

Rarely do you find someone who has always shot well. Like us all, everyone goes through a constant cycle of learning and improvement. So find a good shot and ask them how they got there. What are they doing now that they didn't do when they first started shooting? I have been amazed at the positive effect that some of the pearls of wisdom I was freely given over coffee and donuts have had on my overall accuracy. One such suggestion, added 27 points to my score in one week!

And sometimes the advice points out a bad habit you have gotten into it that you might not have been aware of.

In the same spirit that these gems have been shared with me, I'd like to share them with you. Here are some of the things I found out:

"Your primary goal is to hold your pistol and body as steady as possible. The less movement, the better your accuracy will be."

Sounds simple doesn't it? I thought I was holding my pistol and body as steady as possible, yet the holes on my target were telling another story. I was now determined to understand how the guy next to me on the firing line, with the small grouping, was causing less movement than I. My next questions, and a little research from an advanced pistol marksmanship manual I borrowed from Dick Chavers, gave me the following insights:

Four major things can cause movement when shooting;

- 1) Breathing and the beat of your heart
- 2) The muscles that hold your skeleton in equilibrium
- 3) The fingers of your shooting hand
- 4) The muscles that support and hold the shooting arm steady.

Minimize these effects, and your grouping will become tighter and more consistent.

We'll start with the first of these and cover the remaining three in next month's newsletter.

Breathing and Heartbeat

We can't stop breathing or our heart from beating, but understanding that these two involuntary actions are a prime source of the movement in our bodies can help us minimize their effect. Ultimately, we'd like to shoot between heartbeats, but right now let's settle on minimizing the effect of this natural movement. Obviously, the more beats per minute our heart is beating, the more movement will be caused. If we could always fire on the same heartbeat, we could minimally achieve consistency. I asked another shooter why I shoot differently at practice versus shooting in a string with four other shooters on league night. He told me the following:

"READY ON THE FIRING LINE!"

These words cause adrenaline to be pumped into your blood stream, resulting in an accelerated heartbeat and your muscles wanting to contract harder than normal. The only way to minimize this is to RELAX! Close your eyes, take a couple of deep breaths, and exhale from your mouth. By the time the word "FIRE!" is spoken, you should be back to your normal heart rate, plus your muscles will have closer to normal tone.

The movement caused by breathing is slightly different. We have all learned to hold our breath before firing, but the real cause of movement is, in fact, what our bodies have to do to keep from breathing. Holding one's breath is not a natural act, so muscles in our chest and throat must contract to stop the flow of air from escaping. Whenever a muscle tightens, it is subject to fatigue and will cause movement by losing its tone.

Additionally, your body will start sending impulses to make you continue breathing. So the longer you need to hold that breath, the more fatigue you can expect and the stronger those impulses will be to get you to inflate your lungs again. I was given this suggestion to minimize these effects:

Reduce your body's need for oxygen by taking a few deep breaths before you aim your pistol. Your objective is to increase the amount of oxygen in your bloodstream, which will reduce or eliminate the signals to start breathing again. Secondly, on Slow Fire, if you can't comfortably get the shot off after 10 seconds, consider exhaling, putting your arm down, and starting again. Remember, the longer you hold your breath, the more fatigue and movement you will cause.

We'll cover the next three items in next month's newsletter.

Though I'm no expert, I hope this information can help you as much as it has me. And if you have any secrets or tricks to share, I'm all ears, as they still don't all go in the black!

Politics & Legislation

by John Faro, Political Junkie

New Hampshire

HB 512 is an important bill that has already been approved by the House. The bill amends existing law that prohibits the confiscation of firearms during declared states of emergency to include firearms accessories – think anything from receivers to holsters. It also puts in place penalties for any public official who violates that law and it provides immunity to police officers who ignore orders to confiscate firearms.

HB 582: this is the House version of Constitutional Carry. This is another attempt by state firearm organizations to get this very important legislation passed which will put a stop to abuse by disrespectful licensing authorities. Our Governor vetoed similar legislation last year.

SB 336: this bill seeks to make corrections to “suitable person” substituting the term “proper person” does not solve any of the issues with people who are lawfully allowed to purchase and own a firearm who are being denied a pistol/revolver license. What is a proper person? Undefined words or phrases in the laws of our state have caused many problems for law-abiding citizens since the inception of laws in general.

HB 500: the House bill to allow suppressors for hunting will be voted on by the Senate very soon. The main objection to this bill comes from NH Fish and Game department. They are worried that it will enable poachers in their illegal activities. Laws will not stop poacher any more than laws stop criminal activities.

The aforementioned bills had hearings this week but no committee votes or recommendations have been recorded to date to the best of my knowledge. Source: New Hampshire Firearms Coalition and Gun Owners of New Hampshire.

Federal

The Universal Background Check issue is still alive in Washington and several state legislatures. No one in the firearms community wants to have convicted felons or mentally impaired individuals possess firearms. The problem is the overreach of the universal checks. You can be denied based on an accusation of domestic violence. Post-traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) can get you denied. Who determines if someone is suffering from PTSD or depression or is just having a bad day as we all have had?

News for us older guys and gals: Obama's Social Security Administration has indicated that it will begin the rulemaking process on a plan to strip gun rights from approximately 75,000 Social Security recipients each year without a court order. This gun ban is an extension of the Veterans Gun Ban, which uses government records to arbitrarily and categorically decide when someone receiving government benefits is “mentally ill” and therefore prohibited from possessing a firearm under existing law.

Source: The Gun Activist spring edition.

Finally I hope you are all aware of the government's action against Jerry Delemus who chose to exercise his Constitutional rights by actively supporting the owners of the Bundy Ranch regarding the use of public lands traditionally used by local ranchers for grazing their livestock. Jerry is a New Hampshire resident who believes people have a right to use what is supposed to be public land. Our best to Jerry in his efforts for vindication.
