“Let’s go Brandon” is a rallying cry for freedom

The Spectator World: Posted on 1 November 2021 by Teresa Mull

This is how people communicate when speech is covered up and authorities become repressive.

“Let’s go Brandon” started in the most apropos way imaginable: NASCAR driver Brandon Brown was euphorically thanking Larry’s Lemonade and other sponsors for his win at the Talladega Superspeedway when the crowd erupted into a sing-songy “F*ck Joe Biden!” chant (because, why not?). The reporter — either purposefully or by mistake, we don’t know — did what the media does best and warped reality. “You can hear the chants from the crowd — ‘Let’s go Brandon,’” the reporter said.

And so launched the meme that sank a thousand bipartisanship. “Let’s go Brandon” is now commonplace code for conservatives everywhere. It’s emblazoned on T-shirts, hats, banners, and billboards, and is plastered all over the internet. A Southwest Airlines pilot is making headlines for reportedly saying the phrase when he was signing off the PA system on a plane.

NPR, after diligently consulting with an independent researcher to discover “how this meme got so big,” posited that “Let’s go Brandon” is popular because it’s “shareable and adaptable.” Oh — and there’s the fact that “while it’s possible that social media platforms and search engines might ban the more explicit phrase... the meme version isn’t a phrase that can be banned.” Bingo! Except that “Let’s Go Brandon,” a song by rapper Bryson Gray, has replaced 15-time Grammy award winner Adele’s new single as the number one song on iTunes. And YouTube banned the hit for allegedly spreading “medical misinformation.”

So what’s the sticky genius behind this seemingly innocuous phrase? It’s the ability to say a whole lot without saying much at all.

The tongue-in-cheek phrase encapsulates several things: mockery of the dishonest propaganda machine that calls itself the media. Defiance of cancel culture and the bullying mentality of the woke word police. And a bit of old-fashioned American fun in the face of our uber-serious snowflake society.

Freedom-loving folks suffering under repressive regimes have always had to resort to languages of code to build support while avoiding tickets to the gulag — even if modern-day gulags are now largely of the digital variety. In the age of shadow bans, social media censorship, the politics of personal

NRA Range Safety Officer Training Course

22 January 2022

The NRA Range Safety Officer program was developed in response to the demand for a nationally-recognized range safety officer certification. NRA Range Safety Officers are people who possess the knowledge, skills, and attitude essential to organizing, conducting, and supervising safe shooting activities and range operations. This is a nine-hour course that consists of classroom time and practical exercises conducted on a range. Cost of the course is $35.

This course is restricted to CPF&G Members and is limited to 30 students destruction, and monopolistic news corporations colluding with the political establishment, “Let’s go Brandon!” has become an underground speakeasy-esque secret handshake of sorts signaling resistance to a broken system and its crooked overlords.

In this, it’s much akin to the famous phrase, “Who is John Galt?” which, we remember from Political Science 101, is the opening line of Ayn Rand’s 1957 opus Atlas Shrugged. The phrase is still useful — and in use — today. When “Atlas Shrugged” the movie was released in 2011, the Hollywood Reporter noted that “Ayn Rand’s novel extols free markets and entrepreneurialism and excoriates government coercion and over-taxation, values that unite Tea Partiers. In fact, rallies invariably feature signs that mimic the book’s opening line: ‘Who Is John Galt?’ Another common sign at Tea Party rallies asks, ‘Is Atlas Shrugging?’”

Conservatives may now be forced to invent a whole new parlance to avoid being censored by the social media autocrats playing whack-a-mole with words. Sharing ideas that are contrary to the PC Thought Police has become more difficult in a country that censors its own president from Twitter. And where Harvard Law School professors are granted deference when they say “significant monitoring and speech control are inevitable components of a mature and flourishing internet, and governments must play a large role in such practices to ensure that the internet is compatible with society norms and values.”

And where nothing you say or do escapes the all-seeing eyes of the technocracy. You can’t, for instance, share a post on Instagram about COVID-19 without a message interfering to ask if you want vaccine information from the CDC, UNICEF, or WHO. And we all know what happens to e-mails you sent privately a decade ago (unless, of course, you’re Hillary Clinton).

So don’t be surprised if the word “Brandon” is soon banned by our techno-political overlords and added to the blacklist of “deplorables,” “insurrectionists,” and “domestic terrorists.” Still, phrases like it will keep appearing and doing for freedom lovers what “Who is John Galt?” did for libertarians seeking to cryptically identify themselves to one another without publicly betraying their verboten viewpoints.

The entrepreneurial American spirit of liberty will continue to find ways to resist loudly and deafen the silencers. This is pure, grassroots, populist political will bubbling up, and heavy-handed censorship will only invigorate it, as it did in Ayn Rand’s classic novel. So never forget the power of humor; a silly joke can share a lot of very serious truth. And many a tavern room quip has snowballed into a sustainable political movement.

Thank you, Brandon Brown, and the incompetent sports reporter who ran interference for Biden, for providing red-blooded Americans with a rally cry!

DEFEND THE 2ND AMENDMENT AS IF IT'S A MATTER OF LIFE AND DEATH...

BECAUSE IT IS!

A Beginner's Guide To Purchasing A Firearm For Self-Defense

Ammoland Inc. Posted on October 29, 2021 by Lee Williams Under Creative Commons License

People around the country are finally realizing something gun owners have known for decades: You are your own First Responder, because when seconds count, police will be there in minutes.

After police officials in several states warned the public that they need to arm themselves because of the coming loss of thousands of officers who will either quit or be fired for refusing vaccinations, many holdouts finally accepted that they may need a firearm for self-defense. The response from the rich and famous was to hire private security, which can cost thousands of dollars per month, but the rest of the country is figuring out it could be on its own.

Over the past few months, I have received hundreds of emails from new readers asking the same question: What gun should I buy to defend myself and my family?

Here are some options, but to be clear, opinions on defensive firearms tend to differ considerably. None are gospel, including mine. Please do your own research. Your local gun dealer is a good place to start. Before you plunk down your hard-earned cash, ask yourself a few questions: What do you want the firearm for? Do you want a weapon for home defense? Do you want a firearm for concealed carry? Do you want one for both?

For me, telling someone what firearm they should buy is like telling them what shoes they should wear. One size does not fit all. I strongly recommend purchasing a quality firearm from a quality American manufacturer. Pick a model that fits you best. You will discover that prices will vary considerably, but this is not the time to bargain shop. You're buying something to depend on to save your life or the lives of your family. How much is that worth?

HANDGUN

I prefer a full-size handgun, but I'm big enough to conceal one. Most hold plenty of ammunition, and they're easier to control. Nowadays, there are a lot of tiny handguns on the market that are extremely easy to conceal – "pocket rockets" you can hide in a pair of gym shorts. The problem is that these small pistols are not easy to operate even for an experienced shooter. It's hard, at least for me, to get a good grip on a tiny pistol, so they're more difficult to control. If you want to carry a concealed handgun, I recommend splitting the difference – finding a pistol small enough to conceal, but one that's not too small to operate easily and shoot accurately at distance.

Some brands to consider are Glock, Sig-Sauer, Smith & Wesson, Beretta, Walther, CZ, and Heckler & Koch, but there are many more. Choose a model that fits you the best.

In a defensive situation, shot placement is far more important than caliber, but I steer new shooters toward 9mm. It's readily available – at least it used to be – and recoil is minimal, making it easier to control.

Some shooters prefer revolvers. While I am not one of them, I would never dissuade someone from purchasing a wheel gun, if that's what they want. However, capacity is usually only six rounds, and reloads are slower and require a lot of practice to master.

I've written entire columns on how to best carry a concealed weapon. There are a lot of gimmicks out there, but for new shooters, I recommend a Kydex holster worn on the shooter's strong side.

SHOTGUN

The shotgun has been the reigning home-defense king for more than 100 years. While I happen to believe there is a better option, millions of Americans still rely on a shotgun to defend hearth and home. A shotgun offers devastating firepower. One round of 00-buckshot sends nine .32-caliber projectiles downrange at around 1,300 feet per second. At close range, the wound channel this creates is horrific.

While a hunting shotgun will work for home defense, its barrels are usually too long for close-quarters work and they don't hold enough ammunition. I recommend a tactical shotgun for home defense. Most have increased capacity and an 18-inch barrel.

Dispelling all the myths associated with this weapon could fill several columns. Suffice it to say a shotgun still needs to be aimed, despite what's depicted on TV. It won't wipe out an entire room with one pull of the trigger, and the ka-chunk of one being racked has probably never scared off any bad guys. Good brands to consider are

Remington, Benelli, Winchester, and Mossberg. Again, find one that fits you best.

Shotguns are classified by gauge, which is an old system based on the number of lead balls that can fit in the barrel that together weigh one pound. The smaller the number of balls, the bigger the diameter of the barrel. For example, the 12-gauge – the most common shotgun – is bigger than a 16-gauge or a 20-gauge.

There's always been a lot of talk about the recoil or kick of a shotgun. You'll feel it, but I've never met a new shooter who couldn't handle it.

CARBINE

I prefer a carbine for home defense over a shotgun. It's much faster to reload than a shotgun, weighs half as much, and holds 30 rounds, as opposed to six or eight shells. An AR is a precision weapon, which is important when there are family members at home. Because a carbine is more ergonomic, I find it easier to maneuver during CQB than a shotgun. It's also easier for female shooters to operate. One good feature about a carbine is its ability to accept accessories, namely lights, and electronic sights.

Nowadays, there are hundreds of good AR manufacturers to consider.

A partial list includes Daniel Defense, Smith & Wesson, Colt, Bravo Company USA, Noveske, and Special Op's Tactical.

DEFENSIVE AMMUNITION

A defensive firearm requires defensive ammunition, which is designed to expand upon impact. Target ammunition does not expand, which can lead to over-penetration concerns. In other words, don't use target ammunition for defensive work because it can go through your assailant and into the next room.

Defensive Ammunition is about twice the price of target ammunition, but it is worth the added cost since it is more reliable and less likely to over-penetrate.

I shoot up all of my defensive ammunition every year and buy new. This is extremely important in areas that have high humidity since ammunition can degrade over time and become unreliable. Make sure you inspect your defensive ammunition regularly, too.

ACCESSORIES

I strongly recommend lights on tactical weapons, especially handguns. Most defensive encounters occur at night, so you will need a light to identify the threat before you pull the trigger.

There are several brands to consider, but I've found that Surefire and Streamlight are the most reliable.

Here's a tip: Buy a light for your handgun before you order a holster, since most holster manufacturers have models available for handguns with mounted lights.

I recommend red-dot sights on tactical carbines. A red-dot sight is infinitely faster than standard iron sights. It allows you to focus on the threat, rather than aligning the sights to the target. In my humble opinion, this is as important a purchase as your carbine, so don't skimp. Cheap red-dots will fail when you need them most.

Aimpoint, EOTech, and Trijicon have models that are proven in combat, but be careful. The market has been flooded with Chinese counterfeit sights. You don't want to pay a lot of money for a fake Chinese sight. Order from the manufacturer or a trusted retailer, not Amazon.

TRAINING

Keep in mind that once you've purchased a defensive firearm, you're only half done. You need to be trained by a professional firearms instructor. Fortunately, we live in the Golden Age of firearms instruction. Never before have we had such a knowledgeable and professional instructor cadre. It's never been easier for a beginner to learn how to shoot the right way, or for a seasoned shooter to improve their skills.

Choosing the right instructor is crucial. If you don't, you can risk being turned off to the sport, and you'll likely have wasted hundreds of dollars. Here are some tips for choosing the right instructor.

PRACTICE

I train every day – dry, at home – and it doesn't cost a dime. Dry firing at home is crucial to maintain your skills. It allows you to practice what you learn from your instructor at the range in the privacy of your own home. Make sure you observe the fundamentals of firearms safety. Your instructor can assist you in planning safe and effective dry-firing sessions.

BE SAFE

Welcome aboard! As a new shooter, you will find that most seasoned shooters are welcoming and quick to offer help. That's one of our strengths. If you have questions, just ask.

Safety is paramount when firearms are involved. The best shooters are the safest shooters. Learn and practice safe gun handling, which over time will become standard practice, and please don't hesitate to send me an email if you have any questions.

The Best Slave is the One Who Thinks He is Free

How to Create a Social State

by Saul Alinsky

There are eight levels of control that must be obtained before you are able to create a social state.

- 1) HEALTHCARE – Control healthcare and you control the people .
- 2) POVERTY – Increase the poverty level as high as possible; poor people are easier to control and will not fight back if you are providing everything for them to live.
- 3) DEBT – Increase the debt to an unsustainable level. That way you are able to increase taxes, and this will produce more poverty.
- 4) GUN CONTROL – Remove the ability to defend themselves from the Government. That way you are able to create a police state.
- 5) WELFARE – Take control of every aspect of their lives - food, housing, and income.
- 6) EDUCATION – Take control of what people read and listen to. Take control of what children learn in school.
- 7) RELIGION – Remove belief in God from the Government and schools.
- 8) CLASS WARFARE – Divide the people into the wealthy and the poor. This will cause more discontent and it will be easier to take (tax) the wealthy with the support of the poor.

Does any of this sound like what is happening to the United States? All eight rules are currently in play.

Saul Alinsky died about 43 years ago, but his writings influenced those in political control of our nation today. Hillary Clinton did her college thesis on his writings and Barack Obama writes about him in his Faux books.

Alinsky merely simplified Lenin's original scheme for world conquest by communism, under Russian rule.

Stalin described his converts as "Useful Idiots." The Useful Idiots have destroyed every nation in which they have seized power and control. It is presently happening at an alarming rate in the USA. If people can read this and still say everything is just fine, they are "useful idiots."

"It is difficult to free fools from the chains they revere."
