ATF Attempts Radical Change of Definitions for “Personal Collection”

Reprinted from Ammoland Inc. Posted on 6 September 2023 by Dean Weingarten

Some of the most radical changes proposed in the new ATF rule are to completely redefine “personal collection,” “personal collection of firearms,” “personal firearms collection,” and “hobby.” Three of the long-term exceptions to “engaged in the business” have been:

a person who makes occasional sales, exchanges, or purchases of firearms for the enhancement of a personal collection or for a hobby, or who sells all or part of his personal collection of firearms;

Personal collection of firearms has long meant “the firearms owned by a person.”

None of the wording of those exceptions was changed by the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act or BSCA, which went into effect on June 25, 2022. The ATF is using BSCA to justify its power grab with the new rule. Here is the current definition of “engaged in the business.” From the Legal Information Institute:

(C) as applied to a dealer in firearms as defined in section 921(a)(11)(A), a person who devotes time, attention, and labor to dealing in firearms as a regular course of trade or business to predominantly earn a profit through the repetitive purchase and resale of firearms, but such term shall not include a person who makes occasional sales, exchanges, or purchases of firearms for the enhancement of a personal collection or for a hobby, or who sells all or part of his personal collection of firearms.

This has been a safety valve to prevent the ATF from saying anyone who sells a few firearms here, and there is a “dealer in firearms”. ATF has never been willing to say how many firearms constitute “occasional sales, exchanges, or purchases.” They like to be able to interpret the definition differently in different circumstances. To emphasize: the wording of these three exceptions has not been changed by the BSCA.

With the new rule, the ATF wants to collapse those three exceptions into a very limited definition. Essentially, the proposed definition excludes all personal firearms owned or acquired for defensive purposes or purchased and resold for pleasure and interest as a hobby.

From the proposed rule, pages 39-40:

E. Definition of “Personal collection,” “personal collection of firearms,” and “personal firearms collection”
Specifically, this rule proposes to define “personal collection,” “personal collection of firearms,” and “personal firearms collection” as “personal firearms that a person accumulates for study, comparison, exhibition, or for a hobby (e.g., noncommercial, recreational activities for personal enjoyment such as hunting, or skeet, target, or competition shooting).” This reflects a common definition of the terms “collection” and “hobby.”⁸⁵ The phrase “or for a hobby” was adopted from 18 U.S.C. 921(a)(21)(C), which excludes from the definition of “engaged in the business” firearms acquired “for” a hobby. Also expressly excluded from the definition of “personal collection” is “any firearm purchased for resale or made with the predominant intent to earn a profit” because of their inherently commercial nature.
 18 U.S.C. 921(a)(21)(C).

The above definition excludes from a personal collection of firearms, those firearms primarily owned for defense, the most common reason to own firearms in the USA. It excludes those people who buy and sell a few firearms a year for a hobby.

This correspondent knows quite a few people who like to buy a new gun, try it out, then sell it, buy another gun, see if they like it, and sell it. Those people are currently protected under the “hobby” exception but would almost certainly be prosecuted as a “dealer” with the change in definition proposed by the Biden administration. Some people enjoy the camaraderie, the haggling, the examination of firearms, and the exchange of tall tales while trading, buying, and selling. The enjoyment is the primary purpose, far overriding any profit. The proposed language excludes, by definition, the occasional sales, exchanges, or purchases for a hobby. It only allows hobbies to be defined as “noncommercial, recreational activities for personal enjoyment such as hunting, or skeet, target, or competition shooting”.

Currently, a person who sells part or all of their personal collection of firearms, perhaps because they need the money, perhaps because they decide they want to obtain different firearms, are protected. With the proposed definition, they would only be protected if the firearms were not purchased predominately for defensive purposes, and they were not sold because they needed the money.

The radical definitional changes were not approved by Congress in law. They completely upend the long-standing exclusion of occasional sales, exchanges, or purchases. They appear to be designed to eliminate the defense of self and others from the “approved” purposes of owning firearms. The Supreme Court has long recognized the defense of self and others as one of the primary purposes protected by the Second Amendment.

As a result of the Brady group’s efforts, public comments on the above proposed rule are grossly slanted towards approval (96 to 1) of this totally unconstitutional measure. The anti-gun group launched an email campaign on 9 September, which coincides with the bump to the pro-gun-control comments.

Handloading Supplies and Ammo Order

Here are important details about the order and what I am doing this year.

I am not taking requests for specific items because so much is still unavailable, although availability is better. I have used my judgement about what I think is a reasonable list of items. I apologize if there are any items that you want that are not on the list. For instance one item I could not find were large pistol primers.

The items on the list are what I have found that I can get as of this time. It may be that when I place the order that may change, but I cannot control that. The same is true about the prices. The price on the sheet has a small increase from what the supplier lists – 4%. This is to cover shipping costs and possible hazardous shipping costs. This is important – these prices may change once the order is completed so the club is not subsidizing people. If you order something, please understand you cannot cancel it after I figure out the final number. I don't think they will change much but I want to make sure you know this.

I will stop taking orders on 4 October. I would much prefer to get your request by email as opposed to by phone. I will place some of the order sheets at the trap range and the indoor pistol range also. You can download the order sheet, mark it up and scan and email it. Eventual payment should be made by check made out to "CPFG".

The “Climate Change” Lie

Published 11 August 2023

In the early 1990s, in the wake of the Berlin Wall crumbling and the Soviet Union dissolving, global leaders were left scrambling for an ideology that would fill the void left by then-discredited ‘Communism.’

Enter manmade global warming. It was a doomsday prophecy based on a simple thesis: The industrial revolution had spurred a massive influx of temperature-increasing gases, such as carbon dioxide and methane, and without an overhaul of Western society to make for a “greener” planet, the world would experience a complete meltdown.

Former Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev, who had undertaken the project of perestroika to reform the “evil empire,” was an early prophet. “This is a problem that cannot be postponed. I think the environmental problem will be the number one item on the agenda of the 21st century,” he said in one interview about his environmentalist legacy. “If we just hope that we’ll make it somehow, that nature will cope with these problems somehow through its own resources, and we can just do what we’ve been doing, we could face an even graver situation.”

Former Vice-President Al Gore, the Clinton administration’s point person on Russian affairs during the critical de-sovietization years, was on the same page as Gorbachev in advocating global action. “The planet has a fever,” Gore said. “If your baby has a fever you go to the doctor. If the doctor says you need to intervene here, you don’t say, ‘Well, I read a science fiction novel that told me it’s not a problem.’ If the crib’s on fire, you don’t speculate that the baby is flame retardant. You take action.”

Manmade global warming was subsequently transmuted into “climate change,” a vague term that radicals would later punch-up into “climate emergency.”

The “climate emergency” is now an article of faith among radical activists; it has also evolved into a multi-billion dollar scheme that has garnered the attraction of scientists and activists alike.

The climate gift includes everything from National Science Foundation grants for far-flung projects including carbon capture and even a quixotic proposal to block out the sun itself. The latter proposal, as opposed to being laughed off by the scientific community, is now being seriously considered by the White House; it is being researched at Harvard University and is backed by the “philanthropist” Bill Gates.

The marketing operation rolled out to sustain the climate gift has been sophisticated and intense. It was revealed in spectacular fashion by “Climategate,” a blockbuster story that was all but blacked-out by the corporate press, in a manner that would presage the Covid pandemic and debates about the novel coronavirus’s origins.

Climategate revealed the leaked emails and documents that detailed the psychological operations, data manipulation, and dirty tricks that the climate grifters were employing to terrify the world into taking extreme action.

Indicative of these emails is the revelation that many scientists were critical of the work of James Hansen, who had been a strident vocal global warming alarmist since the late 1980s.

“At very quick glance I am dubious,” one scientist said.

But dissent would continue to prove an increasingly fractious matter, as dissident scientists were personally attacked and pushed to the sidelines. Dr. John Christy, Distinguished Professor of Atmospheric Science and Director of the Earth System Science

Center at the University of Alabama in Huntsville, was lambasted for his stance on the climate change issue.

“This gets to the issue that the ‘consensus’ reports now are just the consensus of those who agree with the consensus,” Christy said. “The government-selected authors have become gatekeepers rather than honest brokers of information.”

“John Christy is not a good scientist,” snapped climatologist Ben Santer, who worked at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. “I’m not a religious man, but I’m sure willing to thank some higher authority that Dr. John Christy is not the ‘gatekeeper’ of what constitutes sound science.”

But who were the gatekeepers? Government-funded scientists like himself, of course. Santer after his retirement would pose as a truth-teller who spoke “science to power,” apparently neglecting to notice that the most powerful people in the world had seized upon the work of climate alarmists such as himself.

But one former climate alarmist has bravely stepped forward to speak true “science to power”: Judith Curry, who recently told her story to investigative journalist John Stossel. “It’s a manufactured consensus,” she confessed in the interview.

Curry explains that there are perverse incentives of “fame and fortune” that are distorting the science.

She was a darling of the media when she claimed that hurricanes were becoming more frequent and powerful. “We found that the percent of Category 4 and 5 hurricanes had doubled,” said Curry.

“This was picked up by the media,” and then climate alarmists realized, “Oh, here is the way to do it. Tie extreme weather events to global warming!”

She told Stossel about the lavish treatment that was immediately showered upon her by radical environmentalists. “I was adopted by the environmental advocacy groups and the alarmists and I was treated like a rock star,” Curry recounts. “Flown all over the place to meet with politicians.”

When her colleagues began pointing out flaws in her research, showing her the evidence that hurricane data were skewed, she realized that her critics were right. “Part of it was bad data. Part of it is natural climate variability,” she explained.

Subsequent peer-reviewed research shows that all matter of data – from hurricanes to tornadoes to earthquakes to precipitation to global temperatures – are being skewed by data reporting issues.

The Italian scientists show that “the main reason of the increase in the second half of the twentieth century is the growing reporting capacity of individual states and that since this capacity has stabilized on a reliable level, the number of disasters has become stationary or has even gone down.”

Another groundbreaking study appears to corroborate this overreporting problem for global temperatures. In “Corrupted Climate Stations: The Official U.S. Surface Temperature Record Remains Fatally Flawed”, is shown how approximately 96% of U.S. temperature stations fail to meet the “acceptable” standards set by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

These aggregate data from compliant stations show significantly lower temperature readings compared to those from flawed temperature reading stations. This is due in large part to the temperature stations being located in urban ‘heat islands.’

But pointing out flaws in the data or its reporting can be hazardous to a scientist’s reputation and ability to work in the field, however. In Curry’s interview, she goes on about how the climate change industry “manufactures” consensus.

She says that the “climate-change industry” is set up to reward alarmism. “The origins go back to the... UN environmental program,” says Curry. “Some United Nations officials were motivated by ‘anti-capitalism,’” she said. “They hated the oil companies and seized on the climate change issue to move their policies along.”

Curry then explains this as the reason that the UN created the IPCC, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. “The IPCC wasn’t supposed to focus on any benefits of warming. The IPCC’s mandate was to look for dangerous human-caused climate change,” she noted. “Then the national funding agencies directed all the funding... assuming there are dangerous impacts.”

The United Nations is now calling for trillions in new spending on projects. It is being echoed by the Biden administration, which early in his administration called on $2 trillion in new climate spending. When taxpayers bridled at the “Green New Deal” bill, he rolled $555 billion in climate spending into the Build Back Better program. Then he passed the $369 billion so-called Inflation Reduction Act, which was hailed as “the largest climate investment in the nation’s history.”

Radical environmentalists and climate scientists, greedy for more, complained that “the tens of billions in investment makes up a fraction of the scale required.”

But even climate envoy John Kerry is skeptical that the United States going to zero emissions by 2050 would ultimately do anything to stop climate change. “We could go to zero tomorrow and the problem isn’t solved,” Kerry conceded about U.S. carbon emissions, adding, “Not when almost 90 percent of all of the planet’s global emissions come from outside of US borders.”

Net-zero carbon emissions would not stop the climate from changing, nor would it significantly slow the increase in global warming.

The World Economic Forum claims that “pre-industrial levels” of carbon dioxide were roughly 278 parts per million (ppm), which is approximately 50% of today’s level of 420 ppm.

But this is not only very low in earth-historical terms, but carbon dioxide increases fluctuate naturally and may follow natural global warming due in part to oceanic gas release. And as more carbon dioxide is released into the atmosphere, plant life tends to flourish and to become carbon sinks. That is indeed the case today, as there are more trees on the planet now than even 35 years ago.

One scientist, Nobel Prize-winning physicist Dr. John Clauser, was recently disinvited from speaking at the International Monetary Fund (IMF) for expressing dissenting views on climate change. In particular, his association with the CO2 Coalition, a group that emphasizes the beneficial effects of carbon dioxide, put the pathbreaking scientist into hot water.

“In my opinion, there is no real climate crisis,” Dr. Clauser said. “There is, however, a very real problem with providing a decent standard of living to the world’s large population and an associated energy crisis. The latter is being unnecessarily exacerbated by what, in my opinion, is incorrect climate science.”

That was enough to get Dr. John Clauser “cancelled.”

That is the inconvenient truth about how the climate-change industry manufactures “consensus”: money, fame, and power for supporting the theory that manmade global warming is a threat to the earth, and ostracism, defunding, and unpersoning for dissenting from it.
