Ex-CIA Analyst Issues Grave Warning About 2024 Election: The 'Deep State ... Will Reemerge'

By Joe Saunders, 2 January 2024

With the 2024 election year finally officially opened, Americans are getting a warning about one of the biggest dangers they're going to be facing this year.

It isn't the efforts of the clearly dishonest establishment media, or even the empty-headed activism of the predictably liberal Hollywood establishment, and it's starting already.

Former CIA analyst John Gentry, an Adjunct Professor of Political Science at Georgetown University, told Fox News, in an article published Tuesday, that he expects the might of the nation's spy services to weigh in heavily when it comes to shaping the atmosphere surrounding the presidential race. And that weight will be heavily against a re-election of former President Donald Trump or any candidate the GOP fields against President Joe Biden.

"My guess is that the the proverbial deep state within the intelligence community will reemerge, because presumably a Republican candidate will again be seen as a threat to the internal policies that many intelligence people like", Gentry told Fox.

This is no idle warning.

Americans of all political stripes should remember that 2020 saw a blatant insertion of the supposedly non-political intelligence agencies into the politics of the 2020 election, when a letter signed by 51 former intelligence officers helped squelch the bombshell story, broken by the New York Post, about the Hunter Biden laptop - a motherlode of evidence that the younger Biden had used his father's name and political power to build an influence-peddling network that spanned the globe.

(Not to mention Hunter Biden's "adventurous" lifestyle when it came to drugs and sex - an obvious national security risk in the man who was the son of the Vice-President of the United States - while he was cavorting with prostitutes and bragging about knowing "the spy chief of China".)

The Beltway website, Politico, headlined its article about the letter with a clearly deceitful summary: "Hunter Biden story is Russian disinfo, dozens of former intel officials say." That both misstated the actual content of the letter and shaped the narrative around the laptop story in a way that favored the Biden presidential campaign - and lied to the American people.

The letter did not actually brand the laptop story "Russian disinformation." It used weaselly worded formulations like "classic earmarks of a Russian information campaign" and "makes us deeply suspicious" to raise questions about the credibility of the story, without ever actually taking a stand (a classic strategy of bureaucracy warriors).

But that was enough, with Politico's headline, to taint the Post's story, and to encourage the lords of social media at Twitter and Facebook to censor or restrict the story, and limit how much American voters knew about the man who eventually became their President (with the disastrous results that have become all too familiar over the past three years).

Likewise, Americans - regardless of their politics - should remember the blatantly anti-Trump activities of the FBI in 2016, from the adulterous lovers Peter Strzok and Lisa Paige, to then-Deputy FBI Director Andrew McCabe and then-FBI Director James Comey.

Those activities didn't stop with Trump's inauguration in 2017 - they haunted his presidency with the "Russia collusion hoax" for the next two years.

In 2024, Gentry said, Americans can expect more of the same.

As the author of a book titled "Neutering the CIA: Why US Intelligence Versus Trump Has Long-Term Consequences," it is pretty clear where Gentry stands - and it's not with his politically corrupt former employer in Langley, Virginia.

Memorial Day ~ 27 May

'Deep State ... Will Reemerge'

He cited a commentary piece published 18 December in a publication called Just Security, by former FBI counterintelligence agent Asha Rangappa and former CIA senior intelligence officer Marc Polymeropoulos.

The article attacked Trump's plans to drain the swamp of the "intelligence community" - a "community" that has long since squandered its credibility when it comes to domestic politics - and likened Trump's well-founded antipathy toward the nation's intelligence services to former Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein's purge of the Ba'ath party in 1979. (Really! Why not Hitler's "Night of the Long Knives" while we're at it?)

For Americans who've never heard of Just Security - which is probably everyone reading this - it's based at New York University's School of Law and bills itself as "an online forum for the rigorous analysis of security, democracy, foreign policy, and rights."

That sounds fine until a look at the front page shows it's editorial stance might as well come from CNN. This link is to the 2 January edition, but it's a good bet any day will show the same bias. These things are as predictable as a sock missing on laundry day.

It might seem unimportant that two former intelligence operatives decided to author a character assassination of Donald Trump on a website no normal person would read, but it's not.

Americans might not trust "government" as a whole, but there tends to be an instinctive deference to "government intelligence" when it comes to the FBI and CIA. Those agencies, social media giants, and the establishment media, relied on that deference to spike the Hunter Biden laptop story when it could have swung the 2020 presidential election.

It's worth noting that Gentry, according to Fox, placed much of the blame for the overt politicization of American intelligence services on the leftist obsession with "diversity, equity, and inclusion" - a DEI mantra that has staffed the agencies with zealots chosen more for skin color and ideological purity than actual merit or integrity.

That same commitment to progressive politics has destroyed the credibility of the establishment media and has even infected the country's military.

The left uses its claims of "diversity, equity, and inclusion" to pretend a moral superiority that doesn't exist, but could appeal to a range of potential supporters who don't look too far beneath the surface (the uneducated, the young, other low-information voters).

The intelligence agencies, likewise, use their presumed inside knowledge, and the default opinion that they care about the future of the country, to abuse the trust of the American people and skew the political conversation about the presidential election.

They did it for the 2016 election. They did it for the 2020 election. And they're doing it for this year's election, too.

It's begun already. But it's just getting started.

Movies and the Real "Old West"

- ★ The fast draw did not exist.
- ★ Revolvers were not worn low-slung.
- ★ Revolvers were generally not fired from the hip.
- ★ Fanning a revolver was unheard of.
- ★ The buscadero holster wasn't designed until the 1920s.
- ★ "Gunslinger" and "Gunfighter" are movie terms.
- ★ Showdowns in the street only happened a couple of times.
- ★ More men were killed with knives in barrooms than by firearms.
- ★ Most cowboys on the range did not carry revolvers, most carried rifles in saddle boots.
- ★ Indians preferred to fight at night.
- ★ Cavalry troopers did not wear yellow bandanas.
- ★ There was no such military command as "Forward Ho!"
- ★ Most women wore dresses, not jeans, and rode horses side-saddle.
- ★ Chaps were only worn when herding cattle.
- ★ There was no such title as Town Sheriff. Sheriffs enforced laws in the entire county, towns were policed by Marshals.
- ★ Indians did not attack a wagon train circle by riding in circles around it.
- ★ Most western forts did not have walls.
- ★ Army chevrons were not worn on shirts.
- ★ One-piece red long underwear did not exist until after 1900.
- ★ Mexican Bandidos did not wear bandoleers.
- ★ String ties are a 20th century invention.
- ★ Panel front shirts were not worn with one top corner unbuttoned and hanging down.
- ★ Stage coaches did not carry a strongbox full of gold on every run, most holdups were made to rob the passengers.
- ★ Most men did not carry revolvers all day, every day.
- ★ The Winchester lever-action rifle was "The Gun that Won the West", not the Colt revolver.

The Moral Case for Mockery

by Seth Dillon, CEO of the Babylon Bee, for Prager University

Bad ideas are everywhere - Spreading like viruses - Infecting every area of our lives - And driving millions of otherwise rational people to embrace the irrational.

Here's one obvious example. It illustrates a broader point I want to make about - of all things - the moral importance of mockery.

Ready for this? We're told by so-called experts, with straight faces, that men can become women and women can become men. We're told that sex is assigned at birth, rather than observed, as if doctors just make their best guess whenever they see a newborn baby. We're told men can become pregnant and "chestfeed".

These aren't fringe ideas promoted by radicals on Reddit. They're mainstream, endorsed by once-respected medical organizations, highly-educated doctors, and popular internet wellness sites.

Go to healthline.com and type in, "Can men get pregnant?" and you'll find this answer: "Yes, it's possible for men to become pregnant and give birth to children of their own." In order to explain, we'll need to break down some common misconceptions about how we understand the term "man".

So the people who just told us men can get pregnant are going to clear up misconceptions for us? Hmm, I don't think so.

It would be bad enough if these ideas were merely popular, but they've quickly gone from mainstream to mandatory. You can't criticize them. You can't even joke about them. Comedians risk being canceled, and in some cases physically attacked, for doing so.

In a twisted way, this all kind of makes sense. In order to prop up an insane worldview that can't be defended, or even coherently articulated, you have to insulate it from criticism - especially the comedic kind that employs mockery to expose foolishness. It's embarrassing to be exposed as a fool. So, it can't be tolerated.

My team at the Babylon Bee learned this the hard way when we made a joke about Rachel Levine, a transgender health admiral in the Biden administration. USA Today had named Rachel Levine as one of their "Women of the Year." They were serious. But Rachel Levine is no more a woman than I am. So, we fired back with this satirical headline: "The Babylon Bee's Man Of The Year Is Rachel Levine."

The mockery, of course, was of USA Today - not the admiral.

Twitter - pre-Elon - was not amused. They locked our account for "hateful conduct." "Delete the joke," they said, "and you can have your account back." We refused.

The intolerable truth you're not allowed to speak is that Rachel Levine actually misgenders himself whenever he calls himself a woman. And pointing that out, no matter how it's done, is not hateful conduct because the truth is not hate speech.

But this is how the system is rigged to safeguard bad ideas. The leftists who dominate our media and culture are armed with both a sword and a shield. They can call anyone who differs with them a bigot, a transphobe, a Nazi. It doesn't matter. They know, they'll never get banned. That's the sword. But if you joke about the Left's lunacy, you'll be suspended or even banned for hateful conduct. That's the shield.

So how did we get to the point where it's considered hateful to tell the truth, even in jest? The answer is simple: We took bad ideas too seriously. Instead of laughing at absurd notions like men can get pregnant or the planet will burn up in ten years if we don't ban fossil fuels or that morbid obesity is healthy - to name just a few - we tolerated them. The absurd has become sacred because it hasn't been sufficiently mocked.

But isn't mockery mean and cruel? Well, that depends. We're not talking about mockery for the purpose of putting people down and making them feel bad. We're talking about using it as a tool to expose foolishness for what it is, so that it isn't taken seriously. Mockery of this kind is not only cleansing, it's a moral imperative. Why? Because bad ideas can have catastrophic consequences. Ask any mutilated teen who now regrets having gender transition surgery. Or any married couple who didn't have children because of "climate change," or any obese person who now has diabetes because being overweight is supposed to be okay. Imagine if the ideas that produced these results had been laughed at instead of lauded.

So many things are off limits in comedy and culture now. And too many people think this represents progress. They think we've improved morally because we make fun of fewer things. The truth is we're more confused than ever because we've affirmed and accepted what should have been ridiculed and rejected. If our goal is moral improvement, we need more mockery, not less.

I'm Seth Dillon, CEO of the Babylon Bee, for Prager University.
